

Cuban manufacturers selling optical splitters

Article Overview

Currently, there is limited publicly available information on Cuban manufacturers of optical splitters, so sourcing may require contacting local scientific institutions or distributors.

Overview

Cuba has a modest optics and photonics industry, primarily focused on research, medical devices, and educational applications. While there are no widely listed commercial manufacturers of optical beamsplitters in Cuba, some institutions and state-owned enterprises may produce or assemble optical components for domestic use.

Potential Sources in Cuba

- Cuban Research Institutes and Universities
- Institutions such as the Center for Research and Development of Optics and Lasers (CIOP) and the University of Havana may have laboratories capable of producing or customizing optical components, including beamsplitters, for research purposes.
- State-Owned Enterprises
- Companies under the Cuban Ministry of Science, Technology, and Environment (CITMA) sometimes manufacture optical instruments for medical, industrial, or educational applications. Direct inquiries may reveal availability of optical splitters....
