

Is the dismantling of fiber optic cables valuable

Overview

Several factors determine the value of salvaged fibre optic cables. High-quality glass fibres and metal elements, such as copper and aluminium, fetch better prices. These cables, originally installed to support communication networks, become obsolete due to technological advancements. The FCC also has adopted other measures facilitating the retirement of copper facilities, including no longer requiring that incumbent providers. As telecom companies migrate to fiber optics, they are poised to unearth billions in value from their old copper wiring, meeting economic and environmental goals. In the evolving telecommunications landscape, a new gold rush is emerging—not for the precious yellow metal, but for an equally valuable.
